When will we say no to diversion? When studies show that lake levels are falling and not being replenished sometime in the future? By then it may be too late. I am of the opinion that businesses need to locate where water is available and communities should not grow to larger than they can provide resources. How can we divert for one business or community and not another? Will diversion be status quo for more businesses and communities as it appears to be becoming? In this case the cost is too high. The Great Lakes is too precious a resource to be abused this way.

Thanks for listening.
