As a Wisconsin resident who receives all water from the Great Lakes Basin under the 2008 Compact, I am concerned.
First, as a straddling community, diversion is to be 'solely to public water supply purposes' or largely residential customers. There are no residential users benefiting from this diversion. Waukesha agreed to return 100% of water diverted to the Great Lakes Basin but Foxconn will be consuming 40%, leaving only 60% returned to the basin.
Second, water returned will have to be cleared of chemicals as yet unknown or constantly changing as technology advances. If undetected or affects are not known, my children and grandchildren could be drinking them in the future. What safeguards are in place? I also have relatives living close to the area. What provisions are in place to protect their water, including chemicals released into the air in the form of water vapor?
Quite honestly, this should have been worked out before the Foxconn deal was approved. Do you really think Gov. Walker will look at your recommendations? Shame, Wisconsin.
