Dear DNR,
Reading Tuesday's 1/30/18 front page article on "Foxconn needs 7 million gallons of water a day," I am outraged. Besides creating hundreds of jobs, which is absolutely outstanding, what however, are they doing for "the people" of the Wisconsin community? Improving air quality? Utilizing sustainable power resources like solar or wind? Improving waste and sanitation procedures (especially Foxconn's)? Replenishing the earth's resources used? Using/renewing land around Foxconn and beyond for best responsible community use? Are you Foxconn coming to our state to give, or are you just coming to take? I believe Foxconn will continue to want more - more water, air, soil, trees, people at Wisconsin's expense while they line their own corporate pockets. If Foxconn is so darn smart, have them make their own required water! Utilize rain runoff, capture steam condensation, build retention ponds, modify/cutback on plant operations while conserving water within plant operations, re-use plant operations water to re-use again, to name just a few. If a similar plant had to be in an acrid desert what would they do?! Does Wisconsin want this kind of large corporate venture without responsible visionary aptitude? Dear mayors & Governor, DNR, please don't let any Wisconsin company do this to our precious, irreplaceable resources. This, in my humble opinion, is the perfect anatomy of greed.
Thank you,
Jan Lawrenz
